

EAACI seeks new Editor-in-Chief of 'Allergy'

Call for Applications

Allergy is the official journal of the European Academy of Allergy and Clinical Immunology (EAACI). An international journal with contributors and readers worldwide, Allergy publishes top quality articles - including original research in the field and reviews of selected subjects of interest to the allergologist and immunologist - and comments on topical aspects contemporary methodology. Please see www.eaaci.net and <http://www.blackwellpublishing.com/journal.asp?ref=0105-4538&site=1>

EAACI and Wiley Blackwell are looking to appoint a new Editor-in-Chief who will work alongside the current Editor-in-Chief from mid-2009 and then take over full editorial control in end-2009. The Editor-in-Chief will be appointed for four years in the first instance with the option of prolongation by mutual consent for another four years.

EAACI and Wiley Blackwell are aiming for a further development of Allergy as the leading European Allergy journal and one of the top International Allergy journals and seek an individual who will continue to encourage strong growth of the journal's quality, reputation and scholarship. Interested applicants should have an understanding of the role the journal plays in the field and a vision for journal's future.

Candidates should submit a CV together with a letter of no more than two pages of A4 summarising the following:

- Experience in editorial decision making
- Network and internationally recognised standing in the field
- Research experience
- Skills in editing and writing
- Plan for the management of the editorship and editorial office
- Other relevant experience and perceived strengths

Expressions of interest should reach the EAACI office by either mail or email, by no later than January 30, 2009
